

Comment from Craig Snyder

Hello: Communication technology is an extremely complicated and fast changing landscape. How this technology should be applied to the automotive world, particularly considering the future of self-driving cars, should be looked at very carefully. A decision to mandate one type of technology should be done only if absolutely necessary. In this case, the negatives of a singular mandate cannot be justified. Manufacturers must be able to adjust easily with changing technology in order to create the safest and most useful systems.

I strongly recommend no regulation on this matter.