

Comment from Daniel Lancaster

If people choose to install any kind of communications technology in their vehicle, they should be free to do so. However, people should also be completely free to purchase a vehicle without any communications technology at all. Furthermore, any communications technology installed in any vehicle should be easy for the owner of the vehicle to turn off or remove at their discretion. Government regulation of privately owned vehicles should always be minimal.

The above is my legitimate personal opinion, both as a vehicle owner and as an individual with extensive education on the issue of government regulation. I hold a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Homeland Security and a Graduate Certificate in Public Administration.
