

Comment from Robert Chmielinski

Hello. There is certainly a need for vehicles of the future to constantly sense and communicate with their environment, given that self-driving vehicles are the future of transportation. But surveillance by third parties - companies, other operators and governments - must be strictly limited and anonymized whenever possible. A time limit on duration of storage of individual vehicular data must also be imposed in any policy standards. Thank you.