

Comment from Kenneth White

I own two vehicles which are included in the Takata airbag recall. The 2010 Ford Mustang had recalls on both the driver and passenger side airbags. Although it took a while for parts to be available, the airbags were eventually replaced at no charge. In July 2016, I received a recall notice for the passenger airbag on my 2008 Chevrolet Silverado. The notice said that once parts were available, I would receive another notice to schedule the repair. To date, I have received no further notice (after 18 months) regarding the recall on my truck. I now find that GM considers this recall "inconsequential" and this is the reason why my potentially lethal airbag has not been replaced. I am very upset that GM is dodging their moral responsibility to fix this problem. GM management should be ashamed of themselves. I will not purchase another GM product due to this unsatisfactory "Petition for Decisions of Inconsequential Noncompliance".
