

Comment from Jordan Eisen

It is very silly to lower the fuel efficiency standards on motor vehicle. The US government and tax payers bailed out the auto industry and the tax payers thus have an absolute right to demand car makers improve fuel efficiency. Please reconsider this proposal and please return to demanding high fuel efficiency from car makers. Demanding high fuel standards saves consumers money, it incentivizes technological innovation, and results in better overall vehicles. The idea that you are proposing lower fuel standards to make cars more affordable in order to increase driver safety is laughable. People who can't afford new cars still wont be able to afford new cars with only a few thousand dollars in savings. If these proposed changes to the regulation were going to save $10,000 or $20,000 than that might make a new vehicle affordable. As it is, most people have to take out a loan and most people are going to want the most amount of fuel savings and good gas milage as possible since they are going to have to pay more than they can afford regardless of these changes. Please do not lower fuel efficiency standards.

Thanks you